

The Fred Roger's Connection

Several stone foundations and retaining walls from the once formerly owned private property are visible at the Buttermilk Falls Natural Site. These are the remains of Fred McFeely's summer estate. McFeely, grandfather of Fred Roger's of children's television fame, was a wealthy industrialist from Latrobe, PA. He utilized the property as a retreat and owned the property from 1930 to 1956. During McFeely's tenure, the property featured a large house, horse stables, a three-car garage, outbuildings, and a swimming area in the creek above the falls. Fred Roger's, creator and host of the public television's "Mr. Roger's Neighborhood", made many childhood visits to Buttermilk Falls.

Buttermilk Falls Natural Area

This 48 acre site is located two miles south of Clyde in West Wheatfield Township. Buttermilk Falls features a 45-foot waterfall, mature woodland, a wide variety of wildflowers, and historical remains. The property was donated to Indiana County Parks and Trails in January 1996 by the Keystone-Conemaugh Group, owners of the nearby Conemaugh Generating Station.

Protecting Natural Areas

Natural areas are set aside to protect both typical and unique plant and animal communities and to protect outstanding examples of natural interest and beauty. Buttermilk Falls and the Blacklick Valley Natural Area are the first formally established natural areas in the county parks system. These areas are in direct support of the mission of the county park system that includes, "preserving, protecting, and enhancing county lands to improve the health of our people and the environmental health of the county."

Geology of Water Falls

Waterfalls the scale of Buttermilk Falls are uncommon in western Pennsylvania. Falls occur when a stream wears away an easily-eroded layer of rock, but then encounters a resistant layer. The resistant layer erodes at a slower rate than the surrounding rock, forming a waterfall. At Buttermilk Falls, a resistant layer of sandstone underlays easily-eroded shale. Buttermilk Falls is in the Hires Run Valley. Hires Run is a tributary to the Conemaugh River.
